

THE WASTELAND

The world is turning yellow. The idea of plants has become very strange. Nature has become a dream. The world knows the color green only through old books and some pictures. No, it is not a desert. We are in the countryside. But there is no nature. Pollution, starvation, disease, suffering, poverty. These terms we hear every day in this world. Even the animals have died. How could they live? No grass... no water. But who caused that? We did. We destroyed the environment. But no one could foresee that this would happen so soon. The survivors are only those who have sufficient financial capacity. Those who own the last plants that have not yet become extinct. Now we are in the future, but not the future we hoped for. It's a terrifying future. Everything works like machines. Even humans have become like robots. No feelings, no emotion, no mercy. But people can't be blamed. They have been deprived of their most basic rights. There is no right to live or to eat. Nobody can talk or give an opinion. It is a complete dictatorship. The strong one is the one who has money and power. In this dystopia, I ask myself over and over again: Is this the future, or has a time machine taken us back thousands of years? I do not know. Are we in the stone age? There are just some types of plants that are considered scarce. The water is dried up and the land is barren. People kill each other in order to survive or to get food. If you look at the numbers, you will find yourself in the year 2060, but it does not feel like that. However, it's the future. Do you know why? Because the future we sought has brought us here, to this situation. The use of plastic, disregard for the importance of the environment, pollution from factories, deforestation and killing animals are the most important causes of our current state. The lack of nature and environmental pollution have wiped out life. Diseases spread rapidly among people. The death rate due to disease, famine, pollution and murder has become much higher than the birth rate. People are divided into two parts, not to mention the classes in society, the rich and the poor, but people's motives differ from each other. Some people are motivated to live even at the expense of others without thinking of anyone and this has worsened the dystopian world. The minority tries to change something. They are trying to create the green color in the wasteland again. They want nature back because they know that this is the only way to end our dystopia. What if they don't succeed in changing the world? The colorless world will collapse. Yes, it is the end of the world. Humans are related to nature and they can't survive without it. I mean that makes sense and is logical. Although people are horrified by the end of the world, nobody can change the truth. It's already late. Even the air is no longer breathable. Pollution overpowers everything. Unfortunately, we now understand the importance of nature. We were busy developing new technologies and changing the world to a more modern one. But we neglected the main part of this universe. It's the end.
